“Perspectives on Health Equity for Nursing and Midwifery”

Prof Judith Lynam,
University of British Columbia, Vancouver, Canada

Aimed at nursing and midwifery practitioners, leaders, educators, researchers and graduate students, this masterclass will examine the different ways that perspectives on health equity can be taken up in nursing and midwifery practice with patients and families.

As an expert in this field, with decades of experience in exploring this area with practitioners and families in Vancouver, Professor Lynam will

- Draw upon her research and participants’ examples to explore the health impacts of social exclusion and marginalisation
- Illustrate how these are manifest in day to day clinical nursing and midwifery practices
- Explore strategies to address issues nurses and midwives encounter in their practice related to equity (inequities) and diversity.
- Draw upon examples to illustrate the opportunities participatory research methods and University-Practice partnerships offer for improving the delivery of healthcare services and health outcomes.

All are welcome to register for this masterclass, but places are very limited.
