

A civic connections approach to climate change challenges across contexts

Dr Tracey Skillington, Department of Sociology and Criminology.

Abstract

Are the effects of globally produced climate harms the responsibility of territory-specific communities? Current institutional responses to climate change suggest they are. This discussion explores the unjust basis of this assumption and considers prospects for developing a more relational model of responsibility prioritising connections between peoples, regions, ecosystems, climate actions and outcomes.